EnableMart Releases New Software for Picture Communication

SALT LAKE CITY, UT – For people who use Picture Communicators or Augmentative and Assistive Communication devices, creating overlays and picture grids has been something of an archaic process, that is until now. EnableMart announced an intuitive new solution, SymPrint, at CSUN last week that makes overlay creation as simple as printing a set of labels in Microsoft Office – without all the messy mail merge stuff.

EnableMart At specialists analyzed all of the top boardmaking and symbolizing softwares and found them all to be somewhat lacking in usability and efficiency. Some of the more obvious hurdles were outdated menus, difficult navigation of AAC templates, inconsistent symbol sets and a general lack of attention to contemporary design & functionality.

This game-changing new software, appropriately titled SymPrint can be use to create not just AAC overlays, but all kinds of symbol-based printed materials from worksheets, flashcards and labels to charts, calendars, games and more. SymPrint's interface has been modeled after the Microsoft Office ribbon with all of the key tools and components within easy reach. The tools for adding and editing symbols, shapes and text look just as you would expect them to and simple drag and drop image navigation means that within mere minutes one can enter the program and start making professional looking symbolized documents and activities.

SymPrint comes standard with Symbolstix symbols inside but can be used with your favorite symbol set or personal image library as well. Users have the ability to import images from their hard drive, CD or right from their clipboard after a simple right click and copy. Once imported, these new images become a permanent part of your SymPrint library into which you can add keywords & search terms for later use.
